Dear Sirs:

This library has recently been presented with a large collection of postage stamps and it is the wish of the donor to provide the facilities for properly exhibiting the stamps.

Can you give me any information with regard to the methods of exhibition of such a collection? I would like to have as full information as possible and would also welcome a reference on your part to any other libraries which may have dealt with such collections.

Yours very truly,

Fred Landon

Librarian.

Mr. Fred Landon, Librarian,
The University of Western Ontario

Dear Sir:

Exhibitions of stamps are somewhat out of our line. The only public collection that I remember seeing on view is that of the National Museum, Washington, D.C. The stamps are arranged in frames and are shown under glass on both sides. I think these frames are about one foot by two feet. Instead of swinging they pull out on tracks and are pushed back after inspection. The National Museum has hundreds of frames made thus. If you should write them I think you could get full information.

Very truly yours,

Curator
